

Privacy Statement

Online privacy policies specify how the United Securities Company protects personal data and information obtained through the company's website. By using our site, you agree to the privacy policy, knowing that the company may change the conditions from time to time and therefore you should review this page from time to time to ensure that it is appropriate for you.

Personal information and its use

When you register on our site, personal information about you is collected. This information includes, but is not limited to, your name, address, email, phone number, profession ... etc., in addition to registering some information from your computer.

The information we collect can be used to respond to your needs when you use the online trading program and / or to improve customer service and / or your support needs and / or to contact you.

Maintaining privacy and protection of information

Your personal information will not be exchanged or transferred to any party for any reason without your consent, and this does not include trusted parties who help us operate our website as long as they agree with them to keep the information confidential. It is also possible to exchange information with legal authorities only for the purpose of investigating / preventing / taking actions related to illegal or suspicious activities.

The company takes a range of security measures to maintain the integrity of your personal information, including without limitation we use the encryption system to protect sensitive information. Some employees may also be granted permission to obtain the information they need to do a specific job such as issuing invoices or customer service, and that personal information is kept in a safe environment.